

Joan of Arc Saved France

Joan of Arc is a well documented story of a young girl raised up by God, who saved France during the Hundred Years War with England. The Country had lost its pride, and her people, the will to fight. As a young girl, Joan, a devout Catholic, had visions of Saint Catherine, Margaret, and St. Michael the Archangel. They would talk to her, and give her instruction, and direction. As a teenager she could not read, or write, but was able to lead the French army to victory against the English invaders. In the course of 14 months, she was able restore much of her country back to French control. While the story of Joan of Arc from the 1400's may not seem relevant to the American Revolution, which took place in the late 1700's, there are many noteworthy connections, and parallels, especially to George Washington. Had God not raised up, and protected Joan of Arc, France would have likely ceased to exist as a country. If God had not reestablished France as a strong country, there would have been no French Indian war in America. If the war had never occurred, Washington would have never gotten his military training, and Britain would have not had to tax the colonies. If Joan of Arc, through God's assistance, had not thrown off the yoke of British oppression, United States of America may have never existed as a country.

“You Englishmen, who have no right in this kingdom of France, the King of Heaven sends you word and warning, by me Jehanne the Maid, to abandon your forts and depart into your own country, or I will raise such a war-cry against you as shall be remembered forever. And this I write to you for the third and last time, nor shall I write further.”

Excerpt: Heresy trials - “Does God hate the English?” “Of the love or the hatred of God toward the English I know nothing” she said. She then added “But I know this, that God will send victory to the French, and that all the English will be flung out of France but the dead ones!” She was then asked “Was God on the side of the English when they were prosperous in France?” “I do not know if God hates the French, but I think that he allowed them to be chastised for their sins.”
